

NEWS OF THE WEEK

Servant Wins Big Prize

New York City—Starting with a 16-cent pad of paper, Sally Halmi, a domestic servant, won $1,100 for her first novel "Katrina." She is a native of Finland and worked on her book during odd hours for a year and a half. She is now a guest at the Park Avenue home of a former employer.

Consensus of Straw Votes

New York City—A slight change was noted in the unofficial and neutral summary of various straw polls throughout the country. This week's figures, from widely scattered sources, give this alignment of the Electoral College:

	Certain	Likely	Total
Roosevelt	241	116	357
Landon	54	124	178

Necessary to Elect 269
Wall Street betting odds were 5-2 in favor of Roosevelt.

European War Scares

London, England—With Lloyds, premier insurance organization of the world refusing to write further risks against damage by air-raids, Great Britain is sharing the fears of all Europe over another war. Announcing two new 35,000-ton battleships, to cost $40,000,000 each, Sir Samuel Hoare, First Lord of the Admiralty, declared "Most of the world seems to have gone mad." Gas-proof vaults are being built in new office buildings.

Republicans Demand Re-Broadcast

Chicago, Ill.—Because the Columbia Broadcasting System shut off phonographic records of President Roosevelt's voice during a political speech by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, the Republican National Committee has demanded a re-broadcast of the address as originally prepared. The broadcasters refuse to use phonograph records on the air and have refunded the charge for the Vandenberg time on the air.

Early Morning Mass

New York City—To accommodate night-club entertainers, club girls, waiters and other night workers, Cardinal Hayes has authorized Father Edward P. Leccese, rector of St. Malachy's Church, to hold a special Sunday mass at 6 o'clock in the morning.

Capital Briefs

Washington, D. C.—Of 3,518 veterans eligible for the bonus but 120,000 have applied for bonus totaling $1,775,006,000. Scrapped old warships has reduced the navy's naval strength since July 1 from 324 ships of 1,080,715 tons to 306 ships of 1,062,875 tons. American cotton crop for 1935-36 estimated at 18,000,000 bales, lower than the ten year average 20,437,000 bales and the smallest pick since 1924-25.

Mountainous Performers

New York City—The sports world this winter will see two of the biggest men ever to enter sports ring. Leon Ketchell, a big weighs 280 pounds and when sleeps he lays his 7 feet 3 inches sideways across two double beds. In the wrestling class is Mac ("Mass-of-Muscle") Levy, whose feet 1 inch manages to tip scales at 615 pounds.

U. S. Steel's Southern Expansion

Birmingham, Ala.—Declaring, believed the depression over, Mr. C. Taylor, Chairman of the Board, the U. S. Steel Corporation announced that his company would spend $29,000,000 in expanding Southern subsidiary, the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company. The new mills will add 250,000 tons to the 17,000 already being made.

Mail Order Houses Prosper

Chicago, Ill.—Both of the country's leading mail-order houses reported all records broken for September business. Sears, Roebuck & Co. reported $50,388,116 in Montgomery Ward & Co. $4,194, a gain of 32% over last year.

Paper Out of Pine

Savannah, Ga.—The paper two years ago that now is made from pine could be made from pine. The new industry has received fresh impetus from the development of a process to convert pine into paper. The process not only opens the way for the manufacture of fine writing papers but produces a source of material for paint manufacturers.

NEW TRAIN-FERRY ROBS THE ENGLISH CHANNEL OF ITS HORRORS TO TOURISTS

At a cost of $5,000,000 in steamship and terminal construction, British and French railroads have perfected a through service enabling London-Paris travelers to make the trip without change of trains. Powerful cross-Channel ferries have a capacity of twelve railroad cars, which are run directly upon the steamers at Dunkirk and Folkestone. Heretofore a 25-foot tidal range made loading and unloading hazardous, but is now controlled by locks similar to those used on canals.

You Pay
Taxes levied on manufacturers are a part of their cost of operations and are included in the price of their products. In the end you pay them. For example, one and two third cents of the price of a loaf of bread is Federal taxes. It helps pay the high cost of New Deal government.

CHAPTER XII

"SYLVIA!" he exclaimed, springing up and advancing toward her with outstretched hand. "Sylvia! What a brick you are to come!"

Angry as she was, when face to face with him she could not resist the contagion of his smile.

"I'm glad to see you so well," she said. "This is Mr. Horatio Fuller of Alton City."

Horatio looked Heath up and down and then stepped forward and gripped his hand with unmistakable cordiality.

"Mighty glad to know you, sir," was his greeting. "You seem to have got yourself into a jam. If there is anything I can do—any way I can be of service—"

"Horatio, you forget we are not here to make a social call," interrupted Sylvia, who had by this time regained her roused chilliness and indignation. "On the contrary, Mr.

"It Was Outrageous of You, Insulting to Leave a Thing of This Sort for Marcia."

Heath, we have come on a very painful errand. We are returning this clock to you."

She extended it toward him, eagerly holding its corner to the tips of her fingers as if it were too hot a thing to touch. "It was outrageous of you, insulting, to leave a thing of this sort for Marcia—to attempt to pay in cash kindness such as hers."

"I'm sorry," Heath stammered. "But you couldn't have been very sorry, or you would have ceased such an act would hurt her terribly."

Horatio Fuller frowned nervously at his lie.

"You deserve," swept on young Sylvia with rising spirit, "to be thrashed. Horatio and I both think so—don't we, Horatio?"

Horatio looked toward Sylvia and then back at Heath. "I don't know what to say about it. I suppose I just slipped and fell into the house. I don't think you and Mr. Heath track your business. It will be true about all around. If you want me you can speak."

Building confidence in Heath's direction, Horatio looked down at his feet.

"I don't like to see a man of your feeling," Sylvia Heath declared, looking at her. "I congratulate you."

"Thank you."

"Everything is settled then?"

"I hope you will be very happy."

She did not reply at once. When she did, it was to say with a humility new and appealing:

"I shall be. I never appreciated Horatio until now. I was too silly, vain—feather-headed. I have realized it since knowing Marcia."

"We all want to be different after we have seen Marcia," Stanley Heath said gently.

The girl searched his face. "I cannot understand you, Mr. Heath," she said. "What has Marcia done that you should have left her as you did? Hasn't she believed in you through thick and thin? Stood up for you against everybody—going it blind at that? Few women would have had such faith in a stranger."

"I realize that. You do not need to tell me," he answered. "It is precisely because she has gone so far I believed her capable of going farther yet—the whole way."

"What do you mean by the whole way?"

"To the end."

"Well, hasn't she?"

"No. She has fallen short—disappointed me cruelly. When it came to the final test, her affection collapsed. Oh, she has been wonderful," he added quickly. "Do not think I fail to appreciate that. She has far out-distanced every woman I ever have known. I simply expected too much of her, doubtless the impossible. Human nature is frail—a woman's heart the frailest thing of all. I have always said so."

"You wrong Marcia," cried Sylvia hotly. "Her heart is not frail. Neither is she the weak sort of person you have pictured. In all the world you could not match her loyalty or the depth of her affection. If after the experience we three have lived through together you have not discovered what she is, it is futile for me to attempt to show you."

"You came into our lives like a meteor—entirely detached from everything. We knew nothing about you and in the face of damning evidence you offered neither Marcia nor me one word of explanation. Marcia asked none. Without rhyme or reason she believed in you. I had not her faith. I freely confess I thought you guilty. Oh, I liked you sufficiently well to be ready to help you save your skin. But Marcia cared enough for you to want you to save your soul."

"When you were taken ill, we both nursed you—I willingly, she devotedly. Here lay another difference. Had you been able to detect it. What happened as a result of this enforced intimacy? You know—know far better than I."

"I fell in love with Marcia," replied the man without an instant's hesitation.

"You fell in love!" Sylvia repeated, her lip curling. "You call it love—the poor thing you offered her! Why, Marcia would have gone to the world's end with you, Stanley Heath, had she the right. She would have faced any humiliation for your sake. If prison doors closed upon you, she would have remained faithful until they swung open and afterward followed you to any corner of the earth in which you chose to begin a new life."

"That's where you're wrong, Sylvia," contradicted Heath. "Marcia was not ready to do that. I tried her out and she refused. When I told her I should return to her, and asked her in so many words whether she was willing to face shame and public scorn for my sake she turned her back on me. She could not go to that length."

"Are you so sure?"

"I am. I am understood," asked Sylvia, stepping nearer and looking fearlessly into his eyes. "There is a shame Marcia never to this world would face for any man, but it is not the shame you have just described."

It is the shame of wearing an outer garment, destroying a home in the village where we have been brought up, we believe in marriage as a sacred, enduring sacrament—not a bond to be lightly broken. When you offered Marcia less than that."

"I never offered Marcia any such shameful passion," Sylvia cried. "Stanley Heath," she cried. "I would not so far."

"But you are married."

"What is a lie. Who told you so?"

"The telephone message. I heard it on the line."

"But, Sylvia, Mrs. Stanley Heath is not my wife. She is my young step-mother, my father's widow. I always have called her Joan."

"Oh! I beg your pardon."

"I see it all now," the man explained. "You have entirely misunderstood the situation. I'm a Junior. Since my father's death, however, people have got out of the way of using the term. Sometimes I myself am careless about it. So Marcia thought—"

"Of course she did. We both did. How were we to know?" Sylvia demanded.

"How, indeed? If an innocent citizen cannot visit a town without being arrested as a criminal within a week of his arrival, why shouldn't he be married without his knowledge? Circumstantial evidence can, apparently, work wonders."

Then suddenly he threw back his head and laughed.

"Bless you, little Sylvia—bless you for setting me right. I told you you were a brick and you've proved it. Thanks to you, everything is now straightened out. Here, give me your hand. How am I to thank you for what you have done? I only hope that young Horatio Fuller of yours realizes what a treasure he is getting."

"He does, Mr. Heath—he does," observed that gentleman, strolling at the same instant through the door and encircling his tiny bride-to-be with his arm. "Haven't I traveled half way across this big country of ours to marry her?"

"Oh, we're not going to be married yet, Horatio," demurred the girl trying to wrench herself free of the big fellow's hold.

"Certainly we are, my dear. Didn't I tell you this morning I came to get married? I was perfectly serious. Dad gave me two months' vacation with that understanding. I must either produce a wife when I get home or lose my job."

"Looks to me as if you had Mr. Fuller's future prosperity in your hands, Sylvia," Heath said.

"I'm not doing any worrying," smiled Horatio. "—"

The sentence was cut short by the radio's loudspeaker:

"The much sought Long Island gem thief was captured this morning at his lodgings in Jersey City, Harris, Chalmers, alias Jimmie O'Hara, a paroled prisoner, was taken by the police at his room on K—street. A quantity of loot, together with firearms and the missing jewels were found concealed in the apartment. The man readily admitted the theft. He has a long prison record."

For a second nobody spoke.

Then as if prompted by common impulse, the three on the piazza rushed indoors.

Elisba was sitting limply before the radio.

"Did you hear that?" he gasped.

"Well, rather," Horatio Fuller shouted with a triumphant wave of his hand.

"Ain't it the best news?" exploded the astonished sheriff. "That sends the whole case up in the air. All that's needed now to make me out the darndest fool on God's earth is for Eliezer's young nephew lawyer in New York, who's checking up there is O. K. If he does, I'll go bury my head. There goes the telephone. That's him! That's Eliezer—I'll bet a hat."

"Hello—Yes, I heard it—You ain't surprised? Wal, I am. I'm took off my feet—Oh, your nephew wired, did he, and everything's O. K. That beats the case, I reckon there's no more to be said. I feel like a shrimp. How do you feel?"

Elisba hung up the receiver.

"Wal, Mr. Heath, the story you told Eliezer and me is straight as a string in every particular," he announced. "You're free! There ain't nothing I can say. To tell you I'm sorry ain't in no way adequate. You'd just have to set me down as one of these puddin'-headed idiots that was overambitious to do his duty."

"I shall not let it go at that, Mr. Sheriff," Stanley Heath exclaimed, stepping to the old man's side and seizing his palm in a strong grip. "We all make errors. Forget it. I'm going to bed. You have treated me like a prince since I've been your guest."

"What I can't understand, Mr. Winslow, is why you didn't recognize he was a thoroughbred from the beginning," Horatio Fuller remarked.

"You've a right to berate me, young man—a perfect right. I ain't got to put up no defense. 'Twas the circumstances that blinded me. Besides, I had only a single glimpse of Mr. Heath. Remember that. After he was took sick I never saw him again. Had we got acquainted, as we have now, everything would 'a' been different. Findin' them jewels—"

"Great hat, man! I had a diamond ring in my pocket when I came to Wilton, but that didn't prove 'd stolen it."

"I know! I know!" acquiesced the sheriff. "Eliezer and me lost our bearings entirely. We got completely turned around."

"A thief with a Phi Beta Kappa key!" jeered Horatio. "Godfrey!" Then turning to Sylvia, he added in an undertone: "Well, so far as I can see the only person who has kept her head through this affair is our Aunt Marcia."

Elisba overheard the final clause. "That's right!" he agreed with cordiality. "The Widder's head-piece can always be relied upon to stay steady."

"Whose head-piece?" inquired Stanley Heath, puzzled by the term.

"Marcia's. Here in town we call her The Widder."

"Well, you'll not have the opportunity to call her that much longer," Heath laughed.

"You don't tell me!" Elisba regarded him, open-mouthed. "Humph! So that's how the wind blows, is it? Wal, I can see this mix-up would 'a' ended my chances any way. Marcia'd never have me after this. Disappointed as I am, though, there's a sight of comfort in knowing she won't have Eliezer neither. He don't come out of the shindy a whit better'n me. That's something. In fact it's a heap!"

OXFORD COUNTY UNITED FARISS

If any one has been afraid that there has been too little going on in the Parish lately, they will not have to worry about this coming week. You might very well start this week. On Thursday night there is a Harvest Supper at East Stoneham. Another Harvest Supper at Center Lovell on Friday evening. You will be glad you went to these suppers when you arise from the table with that "well filled" feeling. Perhaps you will be wanting to go to the Center Lovell supper also to note the improvements in the vestry. We are rather eager to have a look at it, to see how fine it is after painters have finished with their good work. Well, if these suppers are anything like the supper they gave us at Albany a week ago, you will want to be there. Also while talking about suppers you will be wanting to remember that next week Tuesday there will be a supper at North Waterford. Also on Thursday night at Albany—and if you go away hungry from these suppers it will be your own fault. Suppers are not the whole story. One very important feature of the United Parish activity begins this week. On Thursday of this week and on Tuesday of next week, we will have sessions of our Parish Training School. No, we cannot say our Parish Training School, for we hope that Norway and South Paris are going to join with us. Rev. Harry Titus, of the Maine Council of Religious Education is going to teach a course for the teachers of the Sunday school; and the local ministers will have a course of more general interest considering different phases of the activities of the Church. We hope the attendance at these sessions may be large. The other sessions of the School will be held November 3, 11, and 18.

The Union Association meets next Wednesday at Fryeburg. Many from the Parish will be going to that meeting. Rev. Samuel W. Keck, State Supr. from South Dakota is among the speakers and he will speak in the afternoon and evening. These Association Meetings merit our effort to be present. They are high times of inspiration and fellowship.

The Young People will be busy also part of this week. On Friday evening the High School Class of the Waterford Sunday School is to have a social at the Wilkins House. That same evening there is a Family Social at Center Lovell. Sunday afternoon the Junior Chorus of the Parish are going to attend the Junior Choir Festival at Portland. Next week Friday, there will be a Halloween Social at East Stoneham.

"Probation After Death" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, October 25.

The Golden Text is: "The righteous also shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger" (Job 17:9).

Among the citations from the Bible is the following: "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth him out of them all. The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants; and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate" (Psalms 34: 19, 22).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passages from the Christian Science Textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy:

"Universal salvation rests on progression, rule, and demonstration of man's being are not in the least understood before what is termed death overtakes mortals, they will rise no higher spiritually in the scale of existence on account of that single experience, but will remain as material as before the transition, still seeking happiness through a material, instead of through a spiritual sense of life, and from selfish and inferior motives" (Pages 201: 12-13, and 290: 3-10).

THE MAINE MEETING PLACE

The Maine Development Commission, which, in the past, has concerned itself mainly with the recreational development of the state, is about to embark—in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture—on an ambitious program to popularize Maine farm products throughout the country.

Eventually, it is hoped, the Commission will be able to show the same brand of success in this undertaking that it has shown in contributing to make Maine one of the leading recreational regions of the universe.

Before we go into this new agricultural phase of the Commission's activities, perhaps it will prove of general interest to give a brief "outline of history" of the organization: its aims; its ideals and its background.

The Maine Development Commission is the "baby" of state organizations. Formed by the State Legislature in 1927, it has yet to celebrate its tenth birthday.

At the time, a commission of this nature was a new departure in state affairs. Nothing much was known about how it would eventually operate, because nowhere was there a precedent. It was breaking new ground.

Only $25,000 per year was appropriated for the first few years. With this meager amount, the Commission embarked on its duties of "setting forth and displaying agricultural, industrial, and recreational resources, activities, and attractions of the state."

It was obvious at the time that, with the small amount of money available, it would be impossible to do much more than to concentrate on one of the objectives. Recreation, with its quick, sure returns, was chosen.

Through the ensuing years, the Commission gained a reputation in recreational circles of doing a thorough, business-like job.

Competing with sections spending up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars for advertising and publicity, it managed somehow to keep the state well into the running and contributed greatly to the high regard which holds in the minds of all those who vacation in the summer time.

Convinced that the Commission was doing a heroic job, succeeding Legislatures appropriated larger amounts for its use—$50,000; $75,000; and finally, the last Legislature gave it $100,000 with the proviso that $25,000 would be spent for agricultural advertising.

Co-operating with the Department of Agriculture, the bulk of this latter sum was spent last year in advertising and publicizing Maine agricultural and seafood products in newspapers, on the radio, and at the leading agricultural and food fairs throughout the country. Over 50,000 cook books revealing appetizing ways of preparing Maine foodstuffs were distributed. Housewives and Merchants alike were enthusiastic about the Maine program, more to the point, about Maine products.

At present, the Commission is engaged in an ambitious attempt to have every worthwhile product of the state bear a label that will instantly identify it as a State of Maine product. Marketing experts are agreed that we can accomplish this ideal by ed with a strong advertising publicity program, that Maine will be eagerly sought all over the country.

Fortunately, we have one of the most successful advertising agencies in the world. Our potatoes, corn, beans, apples, dairy products, poultry, and seafoods are so far ahead of any others that there is no comparison. Idaho potatoes? Sure they are good, but if you will take trouble to compare them with Maine variety you will get an idea of the value of an advertising program that has "sold" the people the country on the supposition that the Idaho spud is superior.

We all know of the success of California and other states in met in advertising their products. We can do the same in Maine. It means additional millions of dollars in the pockets of our farmers, commercial fishermen, and it means one knows of more worthy product to hold a little extra cash. It speaks up. All we need to put things over is the wholehearted operation of Maine citizens.

Unfortunately, the idea is not enough advanced to give you a program will be operated as it develops, however, you will be informed through this column.
